The doctrine of the survival of the fittest is not a safe one to depend on, inasmuch as the elimination of the unfit might reduce production to a point that would put the remaining producers, temporarily at least, in a commanding position that would prove unsound and perhaps prejudicial to the industry as a whole. While attempting to guard against extraordinary conditions, such as may follow the war, the theory of individualism which gives every man incentive to put forth his best effort must not be lost sight of; it is not only the right but the duty of the State to apply to business a measure of regulation, sufficient to meet the requirements of the well-being of the country as a whole. The rapid unionization of our industrial population bespeaks a further tendency toward what might be termed limited Socialism which can, without doubt, be best administered through the medium of intelligent Government control, the regulatory body acting as an intermediary between the producer and his labor on the one hand, and the consumer on the other. No greater safeguard could be provided for producer and user than the continuation, after the war, of a Federal Fuel Administration, endowed with plenary regulatory powers. The coal industry transcends in importance the street railway, water, gas, and electric power facilities, and should forthwith be classed a public utility of prime importance. Such regulation must be made broad enough to comprehend, not only...
