Original publisher: Washington, DC: Division of Engineering Technology, Office of Nuclear Regulatory Research, U. S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 2004. OCLC Number: (OCoLC)243622882 Subject: Nuclear power plants -- Instruments -- Technological innovations. Excerpt: . . . a 1. 2 Research Approach for the Study This study was broken down into three concurrent tasks. Task 1 identified the relevant in evolutionary reactors and projected the potential application of advanced I and C technologies Task 2 captured lessons learned from the those technologies in future U. S. reactors. Task 3 operational and regulatory experience with advanced I and C technology. Finally, determined the regulatory approaches employed in addressing advanced I and C technology and their relation to current U. S. regulatory processes. The information obtained was limited by availability and access. Thus, the amount of quantitative data that could be obtained was sparse. In addition, the level of detail for the findings focused mainly on high-level concerns. Specifically, those concerns included the I and C experience at the evolutionary plants; the types of problems in the design, implementation and licensing of those systems; and how the international experience relates to applications of this technology in U. S. reactors. In trying to understand the lessons learned, the study considered problems that have occurred, as well as potential issues that may emerge ( e. g. , technical issues, interface issues, codes and standards issues ). A technology list was established to guide the study of advanced I and C applications and experience in evolutionary reactors. The topics are as follows: commercial dedication configuration management diversity and defense-in-depth impact of support systems or tools on safety information management sensors ( new parameters, networks ) software standards system architecture system classification ( what...
