They are now presented to a larger public, in the hope of deepening the interest of the average reader in the religious enthusiasms of the thirteenth and sixteenth centuries. It has long been the conviction of the writer that the study of ecclesiastical history in this country is pursued in too insular a spirit and that it would be a great gain to the Anglican student to investigate those wider movements which swept like an incoming tide over every part of Western Europe. The Franciscan and Jesuit Orders present two very different attitudes of mind within the Church; the former tending to freedom, the latter to the exaltation of external authority. They both have lessons to teach us, but there can be little doubt which of the two is nearer to the spirit of Christ. St. Francis, the most romantic figure of the Middle Ages, presents a type of mind well worth the consideration of a democratic age. The friend of all men, free from the trammels of conventionality, he incarnated the spirit of humility and brotherly love without which all our doings are little worth.
